Membuat aplikasi to do list android studio. Simple to do list app for android. Aplikasi untuk to do list untuk android. Aplikasi to do list terbaik untuk android. Best free to do list app for android. Fun to do list apps. Aplikasi to do list android terbaik. Fun to do list ideas.

Kamu sering kewalahan mengatur jadwal kuliahmu atau sering lupa sudah waktunya deadline tugas? Ini enam aplikasi to do list terbaik untuk menunjang produktivitasmu. Mahasiswa tentu tak jarang memiliki tugas yang menumpuk dan kegiatan padat di luar perkuliahan. Sebagai pengingat, biasanya kamu mencatat hal-hal yang perlu dilakukan di buku atau notes kecil. Namun, di era teknologi seperti saat ini, hal tersebut sudah dapat digantikan dengan ponsel pintar. Ada sejumlah aplikasi smartphone yang dapat membantumu mengatur jadwal dan menyelesaikan tugas-tugas sesuai dengan deadline yang ditentukan oleh para dosenmu. Tak hanya itu, beberapa aplikasi ini juga dapat mengatur to do list aktivitasmu yang cukup padat. Berikut enam aplikasi to do list terbaik untuk menunjang produktivitasmu.

1. 6 Aplikasi To Do List untuk Menunjang Aktivitas dan Produktivitas 1. Todoist Sumber: Techcrunch.com Aplikasi Todoist cocok untuk mengelola to do list yang kompleks. Misalnya, dengan aplikasi ini kamu bisa mencatat kegiatan yang harus kamu kerjakan dalam satu hari, satu minggu, atau bahkan satu bulan. Todoist hadir dengan user interface yang mudah digunakan dan tidak membingungkan. Kamu dapat mengatur to do list dengan menggunakan jenis project, tenggat waktu, dan label kegiatan. Tak hanya itu, aplikasi ini juga dapat diakses secara offline maupun online.
2. Microsoft To Do Sumber: Downloadcrew.com To Do adalah aplikasi produksi Microsoft. Tugas dan kegiatan yang kamu catat di aplikasi ini dapat diatur berdasarkan tanggal, deadline, atau jenis tugas. Aplikasi ini juga dilengkapi notifikasi tambahan agar pengguna dapat melihat to do list yang tenggat waktunya semakin dekat. Setiap pagi, aplikasi Microsoft To Do akan memunculkan notifikasi agar kamu merencanakan kegiatan di hari tersebut. Tak hanya itu, user interface aplikasi ini juga mendukung mode gelap.
3. Google Task Sumber: Tekno.kompas.com Salah satu aplikasi to do list terbaik di Android adalah Google Task. Google Task pada mulanya tersedia dalam bentuk aplikasi di Android, namun kini Google Task sudah bisa diakses melalui website dan akun Gmail. Google Task adalah aplikasi to do list yang berguna untuk mengelola tugas, aktivitas, dan pengingat harian. Jika dibandingkan dengan to do list lain, aplikasi ini jauh lebih ringkas dan sederhana.
4. Any.do Sumber: Fusion9.com Aplikasi Any.do memiliki keunggulan tersendiri. Aplikasi to do list terbaik ini dilengkapi dengan perintah suara dan tersedia di Android dan iPhone. Program dalam aplikasi ini dapat membantumu memajemen waktu dan mengingatkan kegiatan yang harus kamu lakukan.
5. I Remember Sumber: apkpure.com I Remember adalah aplikasi to do list terbaru. Aplikasi ini terkenal cepat dan dapat dinobatkan sebagai aplikasi terbaik di Google Play. I Remember bisa digunakan untuk mengatur jadwal dan menjadi notes untuk kamu. Semua fitur tersebut dapat dilakukan tanpa harus membuka screen lock. Aplikasi ini juga memunculkan quotes penyemangat setiap hari.
6. Ike Sumber: Hrdspot.com Terinspirasi dari buku "7 Habit of Highly Effective People", Ike adalah aplikasi to do list yang dapat membantumu menentukan prioritas dari padatnya aktivitas. Dengan aplikasi Ike, kamu dapat memprioritaskan tugas berdasarkan tingkat urgensi. Ike juga dilengkapi dengan fitur alarm pengingat tugas yang telah mendekati deadline. Itulah enam aplikasi to do list terbaik untuk menunjang produktivitas. Keenam aplikasi tersebut cocok untuk mahasiswa yang menemuph pendidikan tinggi namun tetap aktif beraktivitas di luar perkuliahan. Bagi kamu yang juga ingin menjadi mahasiswa produktif dan cerdas, yuk jadi bagian dari keluarga besar Institut Teknologi Batam (ITEBA)! ITEBA menawarkan jadwal kelas pagi, malam, dan shifting sehingga bisa mempermudah kamu yang ingin berkuliah sambil kerja. Kunjungi website ITEBA dan lakukan pendaftaran mahasiswa baru di sini! There are too many to-do list apps. Trying them all would be a massive task, and I know—because I tried. Why are there so many apps for a task that's easily done on sticky notes? Because managing tasks is an intensely personal thing. People will reject anything that doesn't feel right. That's a good instinct, but it makes it hard to find the right app. To that end, we've been hard at work researching the best to-do apps, trying to find the right ones for various use cases. Research for these pieces was exhaustive. We started by finding the best apps for every platform: Android, Windows, macOS, and iPhone/iPad. We then tried the top-rated apps in every respective app store, and spent way too much time migrating our personal to-do lists from one app to another. And now we're offering you what we feel is the cream of the crop. Whatever you're looking for, one of these apps is going to be right for you. Click on any app to learn more about why we chose it, or keep reading for more context on to-do list apps.

The best to-do list apps: Todoist for balancing power and simplicity; TickTick for embedded calendars and timers; Microsoft To Do for Microsoft power users (and Wunderlist refugees); Things for elegant design; OmniFocus for specific organizational systems; Habitica for making doing things fun; Google Tasks for Google power users; Any.do for people who forget to use to-do apps; Other options, including project management apps, note-taking applications, and other tools that can do the job. What makes a great to-do list app? All of our best apps roundups are written by humans who've spent much of their careers using, testing, and writing about software. We spend dozens of hours researching and testing apps, using each app as it's intended to be used and evaluating it against the criteria we set for the category. We're never paid for placement in our articles from any app or for links to any site—we value the trust readers put in us to offer authentic evaluations of the categories and apps we review. For more details on our process, read the full rundown of how we select apps to feature on the Zapier blog. When it comes to to-do lists, everyone has different criteria. We kept this in mind as we tested, and we noticed a few features that made certain apps stand out. The best to-do list apps: Make it fast to add and organize tasks. Ideally, a task is added and categorized in a couple taps or keystrokes. Offer multiple ways to organize your tasks. Tags, lists, projects, and due dates are all helpful, and the best apps offer at least a few categories like this. Remind you about self-imposed deadlines. Notifications, widgets, emails—the best applications make it obvious when something needs to be completed. Offer clean user interfaces. Well-designed to-do apps fit into your workflow so you can get back to what you're supposed to be doing. Sync between every platform you use. Which platforms will depend on what you personally use, but we didn't consider anything that doesn't sync between desktop and mobile. We tried to find the best apps that balance these things in various ways. None of these options will be right for everyone, but hopefully one of them is right for you. Let's dive in.

Best to-do list app for balancing power and simplicity: Todoist (Windows, macOS, Android, iPhone, iPad, Web) Todoist isn't the most powerful to-do list out there. It's also not the simplest. That's kind of the point: this app balances power with simplicity, and it does so while running on basically every platform that exists. That's a strong selling point—which is probably why Todoist is one of the most popular to-do lists right now. Adding tasks was quick on every platform in our tests, thanks in part to natural language processing (type "buy milk Monday" and the task "buy milk" will be added with the next Monday set as your due date). You can put new tasks in your Inbox and then move them to relevant projects; you can also set due dates. Paid users can create custom filters and labels, and there are also some basic collaboration features. Todoist is flexible enough to adapt to most workflows but not so complicated as to overwhelm. And it adds new features regularly: you can view projects as a Kanban board, for example, and navigating the app by keyboard is much smoother after recent updates. Overall, this is a great first to-do list app to try out, especially if you don't know where to start. Todoist also integrates with Zapier, which means you can automatically create tasks in Todoist whenever something happens in one of your favorite apps. Here are some examples. Add new saved Slack messages to Todoist as tasks. Todoist price: Free version available; paid version from $3/month. Check out more ideas for automating Todoist with Zapier. Best to-do list app with embedded calendars and timers: TickTick (Android, Windows, macOS, iPhone and iPad, Web) TickTick is a fast-growing to-do list app that offers a wide array of features on just about every platform you can imagine. Adding tasks is quick thanks to natural language processing. There's also a universal keyboard shortcut offered on the desktop versions and pinned notifications and widgets on mobile, which makes it quick to add a task before getting back to what you're doing. Tasks can be organized using lists, tags, and due dates, and there's even the ability to add sub-tasks to any task. TickTick offers all of this with apps that feel native—the macOS version is distinct from the Windows version, for example, in ways that make sense given the differences between those two systems. TickTick also offers a few features that are above and beyond what other apps offer. First, there's a built-in Pomodoro timer, allowing you to start a 25-minute work session for any of your tasks (complete with numerous white noise options, if you want). Second, there's integration with various third-party calendars, allowing you to see your tasks and your appointments in one place, and even do some time blocking. There's also a built-in habit-tracking tool, allowing you to review how many days you did or didn't stick to your exercise and diet commitments. A recent update added an Eisenhower Matrix view, allowing you to prioritize your tasks based on what's urgent and what's important. It's a great collection of features, unlike anything else on the market. With TickTick's Zapier integration, you can automatically create tasks in TickTick whenever you do things like save a message in Slack or star a new email. Create TickTick tasks from new saved Slack messages. TickTick price: Free version available; paid version from $2.40/month. Check out other ways you can automate TickTick with Zapier. Best to-do list app for Microsoft power users (and Wunderlist refugees): Microsoft To Do (Android, Windows, Web, iPhone and iPad) In 2015, Microsoft bought Wunderlist and put that team to work on a new to-do list app. Microsoft To Do is the result of that, and you can find Wunderlist's DNA throughout the project. The main interface is clean and friendly, adding tasks is quick, but there's a lot of flexibility below the surface. But the real standout feature here is the deep integration with Microsoft's ecosystem. Outlook users can sync their tasks from that application over to Microsoft To Do, meaning there's finally a way to sync Outlook tasks to mobile. Windows users can add tasks using Cortana or by typing in the Start menu. For example, you can type "add rice to my shopping list," and rice will be added to a list called "shopping." This is also the prettiest to-do list app on the market, in my opinion. You can set custom background images for every one of your lists, allowing you to tell at a glance which list you're looking at. You're going to be looking at your task list all day—it might as well look good. Microsoft To Do integrates with Zapier, which means you can do things like create a task in To Do whenever important tasks pop up in your other apps. Here are some examples to get started. Microsoft To Do price: Free. The best to-do list app with elegant design: Things (macOS, iPhone, iPad) To-do list apps tend to fall into two categories: the complex and the minimalist. Things is somehow both. That's about the highest praise I can give a to-do list app. This is an app with no shortage of features, and yet it always feels simple to use. Adding tasks is quick and so is organizing them, but there's seemingly no end of variation in ways to organize them. Areas can contain tasks or projects; projects can contain tasks or headers that can also contain tasks; and tasks can contain sub-tasks if you want. It sounds confusing, but it isn't, which really speaks to how well Things is designed. Other applications offer these features, but Things does it in a way that never feels cluttered, meaning you can quickly be done with looking at your to-do list and get back to whatever it is you're doing. Combine this blend of functionality and beauty with features like a system-wide tool for quickly adding tasks, integration with your calendar so you can see your appointments while planning your day, intuitive keyboard shortcuts, reminders with native notifications, and syncing to an iPhone and iPad app. The only downside here is the complete lack of versions for Windows and Android, though this decision is probably part of what allows the team to focus on making such a clean product. If you're an Apple user, you owe it to yourself to try out Things. You can automatically add to-dos to Things from your other apps with Things' integrations on Zapier. Here's some inspiration. Add saved Slack messages to Things as to-dos. Add new Trello cards to Things as to-dos. Things price: $49.99 for macOS (15-day free trial), $19.99 for iPad, $9.99 for iPhone. Best to-do list app for users with a very specific organizational system: OmniFocus (macOS, iPhone, iPad) OmniFocus is nothing if not flexible. This Apple-exclusive application is built around the Getting Things Done (GTD) philosophy trademarked by David Allen, but an array of features means it can be used for just about any organizational system you can imagine. There are three different kinds of projects you can set up, for example, depending on whether you need to do tasks in a specific order or not. There are six main views by default, allowing you to organize your tasks by things like due date, projects, and tags. You can even add more views, assuming you have the Pro version. You get the idea. OmniFocus is a power user's dream, with more features than anyone can hope to incorporate into a workflow, which is kind of the point: if there's a feature you want, OmniFocus has it, so you can organize your tasks basically any way you can imagine. Syncing is offered only between Apple devices. There's a web version that's intended for occasional usage away from your Apple machines, but non-Apple users should look elsewhere. You can connect OmniFocus to your other favorite apps with OmniFocus's Zapier integration. Whenever something happens in another app that you want to keep track of in OmniFocus, Zapier will automatically send it there. Create OmniFocus tasks from new saved Slack messages. OmniFocus price: From $99.99 per year for recurring plan. Also available as a one-time purchase from $49.99 (14-day free trial). Best to-do list app for making doing things fun: Habitica (Android, iPhone and iPad, Web) Games are fantastic at motivating mundane activity—how else can you explain all that time you've spent on mindless fetch quests? Habitica, formerly known as HabitRPG, tries to use principles from game design to motivate you to get things done, and it's remarkably effective. You can add tasks, daily activities, and habits to a list. You also have a character, who levels up when you get things done and takes damage when you put things off. You can also earn in-game currency for buying offline rewards, such as a snack, or in-game items like weapons or even silly hats. This is even better when you join a few friends and start a party. You can all fight bosses together, but be careful: fail to finish some tasks on time and your friends will take damage. If that doesn't motivate you, nothing will. What's the downside? Habitica isn't a great to-do list for managing long-term projects, so you might need something else for that. But if motivation is your problem, Habitica is well worth a spin. Habitica Price: Free version available; paid version from $5/month. Best to-do list app for Google power users: Google Tasks (Web, Android, iPhone and iPad) If you live in Gmail and Google Calendar, Google Tasks is an obvious to-do list to try out. That's because it lives right in the sidebar of those two applications, and offers more than a few integrations. Plus, there's a dedicated mobile app. The app itself is spartan. Adding tasks is quick, particularly if you spend a lot of time in Gmail anyway, but there's not a lot of organizational offerings. There are due dates, lists, subtasks, and not much else. On the desktop, though, the integration with Gmail is a key selling point. You can drag an email to Google Tasks to turn it into a task, for example. You also can see your tasks on your Google Calendar, if you want. The best to-do app is one that's always handy. If you're the kind of person who always has Gmail open on your computer, it's hard for any app to be handier than Google Tasks. The mobile versions make those tasks accessible on the go. You can automatically move information between Google Tasks and your other apps with Google Tasks' integration on Zapier. Here are a few examples of workflows you can automate, so you can stop manually moving your tasks. Create Trello cards from new Google Tasks tasks. Add new Google tasks to Any.do. Google Tasks price: Free. Best to-do list app for people who forget to use to-do apps: Any.do (Android, iPhone and iPad, Web) Any.do offers a really slick mobile app that makes it quick to add tasks, organize them into lists, and add due dates. But where it really shines is with its daily "Plan my Day" feature, which forces you to schedule when you'll accomplish your various tasks, so that you remember to actually do things. Any.do also integrates nicely with Google and Outlook calendars, allowing you to see your appointments and your tasks in one place. This is exactly what you need if you're the kind of person who adds things to a list and forgets about them. The desktop version isn't quite as slick as the mobile version—it feels cluttered and is more than a little confusing. Still, Any.do's mobile version alone makes a compelling reason to give it a shot, especially if that's where you do most of your task management. Any.do integrates with Zapier, so you can automatically add tasks to Any.do whenever there's a new calendar event, note, or task in your other apps. Add Evernote reminders to Any.do as tasks. Add new Google tasks to Any.do. Any.do price: Free version available; paid version from $2.99/month. Other to-do list options: We focused on dedicated to-do list apps in this roundup, but plenty of other software can fulfill the same function. Here are a few ideas if none of the above quite fit what you're looking for: Finding the right task management system is hard because it's so personal. To that end, let me know if there's anything you think I missed. This post was originally published in April 2016 by Andrew Kunes.
